I lost $18,000 on my third deal. Best money I ever spent.

swipe

What's inside

- the $18,000 mistake
- why month one lies
- boring beats brilliant
- the habit nobody keeps
- what year five does

The $18,000 Mistake

I bought a rental because it showed well and the seller was motivated.

I ran the numbers for one month and called it a deal. Eighteen thousand dollars later I understood the difference between a good house and a good investment.

The house was never the problem.

Month One Lies

Every property looks profitable on day thirty. Rent lands, nothing is broken yet, and you feel like a genius.

Then the vacancy, the roof, the tax reassessment. Real returns only show up over years, not weeks.

Most people quit before that shows.

Boring Beats Brilliant

Nobody I know with a real portfolio did it with one clever move.

They bought a decent property, held it, fixed it, and did the same unremarkable thing again five years later.

There is a price nobody quotes.

Pay Yourself First

The buyers who move fast when the right deal shows up are not the ones who earn the most.

They are the ones who moved money into an untouchable account every single month while everyone else waited to feel ready.

That habit does something strange later.

Bet On Yourself

Nobody hands you permission to start. There is no year where the market feels safe and your income feels certain.

You decide you are the asset, and you buy anyway, and you keep going while the doubters watch.

Almost nobody lasts that long.

Send this to someone who has been researching their first investment property for two years and still has not made an offer. Follow for more.

Follow for more.