

Buyers pay for 10 option days.
Most only get 6.

What's inside

- Calendar days, not business
- Where four days vanish
- Waiting on repair bids
- Sellers watch your clock
- Buying extra days

The Clock Never Pauses

Your option period runs on calendar days.
Saturdays, Sundays and holidays all count against you.

That is the small bite.

Six Days, Not Ten

The inspectors worth hiring are booked two to three days out.

Add another day for the written report to actually land in your inbox.

Ten paid days just became six real ones.

Those six are not yours either.

Bids Eat The Rest

A foundation note means you now need a structural engineer.

Roofers and plumbers quote on their schedule, not on yours.

Then the hard part starts.

The Seller Sees Your Deadline

Your expiration date is written in the contract they are holding.

Ask for repairs on day nine and they can simply wait you out.

Most buyers blink right here.

You Can Buy Time

Extensions are allowed, and they cost you real money.

They also have to be signed before the clock hits zero.

One hour late and that fee buys you nothing.

There is a cheaper move.

Comment

TOUR

and I'll DM you
my day by day option period timeline plus the two lines I put in an offer to get more days for free

Save this for later.