

The house is the last thing you should pick.

What's inside

- House comes last
- Heat runs the clock
- The twenty minute myth
- Tax swing by county
- School lines move
- Weekend radius

Summer Owns Your Day

June through September, real life happens before ten or after eight.

Locals plan around shade the way other states plan around snow.

The map lies too.

Twenty Minutes Is Fiction

That twenty minute drive across Austin at 8am is closer to fifty.

San Antonio loops move better. In DFW, distance is honest distance and there is a lot of it.

Where you land costs more.

No Income Tax, But

Texas takes it back through property tax and insurance, and the rate changes by county and district.

Two houses at the same price can carry very different yearly costs.

One map line changes everything.

School Zones Get Redrawn

Districts grow fast here and attendance boundaries move with them.

The campus everyone raved about three years ago may not be the one you are zoned to today.

Saturdays get expensive too.

Weekends Have A Radius

From San Antonio you are ninety minutes from river country and a morning from the coast.

Austin trades that for lake and greenbelt. DFW weekends point at lakes and a longer drive to get anywhere else.

Wrong order costs you thousands.

Run It This Way

City first. Then commute. Then the tax and insurance number. Then schools.

The house is what is left standing after those four filters, not the thing you start with.

Most people learn this after closing.

Comment

PLAN

and I'll DM you

the city by city sheet on San Antonio, Austin and DF with commute times, tax and insurance ranges, and your exact payment breakdown for each

Save this for later.