

New builds get inspected three times. None of them for you.

What's inside

- Three inspections, none yours
- The pre-drywall window
- Walkthrough sign off trap
- Month eleven deadline
- What it actually costs

Who Those Three Serve

The city inspector checks code minimums and leaves.

The builder's own walk protects the builder.

The final walkthrough is a paint and scratch tour.

The expensive stuff hides earlier.

The Pre-Drywall Window

Framing, wiring, plumbing and ducts are visible for about a week.

After insulation and drywall, all of it disappears behind a wall.

Ask for that date the moment the frame goes up.

You get one more shot.

The Sign Off Trap

At the walkthrough they hand you a punch list and a pen.

Buyers write down nail pops and miss the grading and the attic.

Anything you sign off on quietly becomes yours.

Then a clock starts running.

Month Eleven

Most builder workmanship coverage runs one year from closing.

Book your own inspection at month eleven, not month thirteen.

That gives you weeks to file while the claim still counts.

Someone has to pay this.

What It Runs You

A pre-drywall visit and an eleven month visit each cost a few hundred. One missed framing or drainage issue costs many times that. The builder is never going to offer to book it for you.

Knowing what to flag is harder.

Comment

CHECKLIST

and I'll DM you
the new build inspection checklist I hand buyers before their pre-drywall walk

Save this for later.