

Nobody warns
transplants about the 11
weeks.

What's inside

- The 11 week stretch
- No income tax, but
- Commute math by metro
- The school zone trap
- Breakfast taco loyalty
- Your weekend range

The 11 Weeks

Late June to early September, triple digits is the default, not the news story.

Life moves indoors, or into water, and you plan errands around 7am.

That is not what stings.

No Income Tax, But

Texas gets paid another way, and property tax rates swing hard by county and district.

Two nearly identical houses ten minutes apart can carry very different bills.

The map decides more than money.

Commutes Lie By Metro

In DFW the distance is fine and the sprawl is not. Twenty miles can eat forty five minutes.

Austin has corridors that seize up and take the whole city with them. San Antonio loops mostly behave.

Then people pick for the wrong reason.

The School Zone Trap

Buyers shop the district name and never look at the actual campus they are zoned to.

Boundaries get redrawn as rooftops go up, and yours can move before you finish unpacking.

Locals judge you on something else.

Breakfast Tacos Are Regional

San Antonio and Austin argue about this the way other states argue about sports teams.

Move north and the morning question quietly changes to kolaches and brisket by noon.

The best part sits outside city limits.

Your Weekend Range

From Austin the hill country is forty minutes. From San Antonio the coast is about three hours.

DFW trades scenery for water and puts a lake within twenty five minutes of almost everyone.

Most people never use half of it.

Your call

Hill country afternoon, Gulf coast weekend, or a DFW lake day?

Save this for later.