

The 47 day stretch
nobody warns
transplants about.

What's inside

- 47 days explained
- The water bill trap
- No income tax, but
- Commutes that lie
- School zoning shifts
- Weekends by city

The 47 Day Stretch

Some Texas summers stack 47 days over 100 degrees.

It changes when you run errands, not if you run them. Mornings and after dark.

Cooling is not the expensive part.

The Water Bill Trap

Summer water beats summer electricity for a lot of people here.

Clay soil moves. You water the foundation on a schedule or you pay a repair crew later.

The bigger bill lands once yearly.

No Income Tax, But

Texas gets it back through property tax.

Rates swing hard between counties, cities, and school districts. Two nearly identical houses can be taxed very differently.

Where you buy changes more than that.

Commutes That Lie

Austin's 20 minute drive is 55 minutes at five o'clock.

DFW feels easy until a toll road or a lake sits between you and work. San Antonio loops back up fast at rush hour.

Your street decides something bigger.

School Zoning Shifts

Districts here grow fast, so attendance boundaries get redrawn.

The rating follows the boundary, not the house
People buy for a campus and get reassigned two years later.

Weekdays are only half the problem.

Weekends By City

From San Antonio and Austin, the Hill Country is under an hour.

From DFW you are driving to lakes and small towns instead. Same state, completely different Saturday.

Most people pick the wrong city.

Comment

PLAN

and I'll DM you

the Texas transplant plan: tax rate ranges by county, real drive times for each metro, and the exact payment breakdown for your budget

Save this for later.