

You bought 10
days to walk away. Most use four.

What's inside

- What the fee buys
- Clock starts sooner
- Six days vanish
- Silence costs you
- The 4:55 stall

What The Fee Buys

The option fee is not a deposit on the house. It buys days.

Inside those days you can walk for any reason. Even a bad feeling in the driveway.

You will not get all of them.

The Clock Started Yesterday

Day one is the day after both sides sign.
Weekends count. Holidays count.

It dies at 5pm on the last day, not midnight.

And that is before anyone shows up.

Where Six Days Go

A good inspector is booked three days out. The written report lands a day after that.

Ten days on paper. Four days to actually decide. That is the entire gap nobody warns you about.

Deciding is not the same as done.

Silence Means You Bought It

Terminating is an action. Written notice, delivered, before the deadline hour.

Nobody calls to remind you. The contract just quietly hardens around you.

Walking is rarely what you want.

Repairs Are A Race

Any price cut or repair promise has to be signed inside that same window. Not after it.

A seller who stalls until 4:55 knows exactly what they are doing.

This gets solved before you offer.

Comment

TOUR

and I'll DM you

my day by day option period timeline and the two lines to put in your offer so you never lose a day

Save this for later.