

41% of Texas
listings cut price. That's not the problem.

What's inside

- The 41% mirage
- Second cut damage
- Reset clocks
- The quiet discount
- Two timing mistakes

The 41% Mirage

Roughly 41% of active Texas listings took a price cut recently.

That reads like panic. It isn't.

Most of those cuts came off a number that was never real to begin with.

The first cut is never real.

Cut Twice, Sell Once

A home that cuts once usually cuts again inside a month.

By then buyers assume something is wrong with the house.

Pricing at the last real comp on day one beats two cuts every time.

The clock is being reset.

Days On Market Lies

Plenty of listings get withdrawn and relisted so the counter starts over.

You see 6 days. The house has actually been sitting for 96.

Read the price history, not the days on market field.

Sellers found a quieter discount.

Concessions Beat Cuts

Texas sellers are holding the sticker price and paying buyer costs instead.

Rate buydowns and closing credits are moving more money than price drops are.

It protects the comp for them and lowers the real cost for you.

Most people time this wrong twice.

The Quiet Stretch

Buyers shop in spring, when they have the least leverage all year.

Sellers list in January because it feels fresh, then sit and wait.

The deals get made in the weeks nobody is paying attention.

Your zip code changes everything.

Comment

LIST

and I'll DM you

this month's price cut percentage and true days on market for your zip code, plus the full payment breakdown on any house you're watching

Save this for later.