

Two lines in his contract cost him $27,000.

What's inside

- the clock nobody starts
- what the fee buys
- weekends still count
- book before you sign
- one ask, not three

The Clock Starts Witho You

A buyer signed on a Friday and mailed his option fee Monday.

By then his window to walk was already dead, and the foundation report came back ugly.

The fee has to be delivered fast or the whole right disappears.

most buyers misread what it buys

You Are Renting Time

That fee is not a deposit on the house. It is payment for the right to cancel for any reason at all.

Bad inspection. Cold feet. Nosy neighbour. Does not matter.

but the calendar is the trap

Weekends Still Count

These are calendar days, not business days.

Sign on a Thursday and you just burned a chunk of your window on a weekend nobody works.

The deadline hits at a fixed hour on the last day.
Not end of day.

and inspectors are booked solid

Book Before You Sign

Good inspectors run five to eight days out in a busy month.

If you start calling after the contract is executed, you get the report with almost no time left to act on it.

Line up the appointment while the offer is still being negotiated.

then most people fumble the ask

One Ask, Not Three

Buyers send a repair request, then remember something, then send another.

Every follow up tells the seller you are emotionally in the house already.

Bundle it. Send once. Give a real deadline.

here is the whole timeline

Comment

TOUR

and I'll DM you

the day by day option period timeline with eve deadline marked, plus the question list I give my buyers to hand their inspector

Save this for later.