

Most buyers burn 3
of their 7 option da

What's inside

- When the clock starts
- The 5 PM cutoff
- Where 3 days vanish
- What the fee buys
- Repairs are not automatic
- Buying more time

The Clock Starts Early

Your option period starts the day the contract is executed.

Not the day you book the inspection. Not the day you feel ready.

It ends at a strange hour.

The 5 PM Wall

The deadline is 5 PM on the last day, not midnight.

Miss it by ten minutes and your right to walk is gone.

Fewer days than you think.

Where 3 Days Go

Good inspectors are booked 2 to 3 days out.

The report usually lands a day after they walk the house.

That is 3 of your 7 days spent before you learn a single thing.

The fee has one job.

The Fee Buys One Thin

The option fee buys the right to walk for any reason at all.

It does not buy repairs and it does not buy a price cut.

Whether it gets credited back at closing is a checkbox most people never read.

Asking is the easy part.

Nobody Has To Fix It

An inspection report does not obligate a seller repair anything.

You ask, they can say no, and then you decide before the clock runs out.

You are not out of moves.

You Can Buy Time

An extension has to be agreed in writing before the current period expires.

It usually costs another fee, and the seller can refuse.

Ask at 4:55 on the last day and the answer is n

Improvising this costs real money.

Comment

TOUR

and I'll DM you
my day by day option period checklist with every deadline and who to call first

Save this for later.