

The heat is not what breaks transplants
here.

swipe —

What's inside

- Ten miles, thirty five minutes
- Toll roads, every day
- School lines split streets
- The January envelope
- Hail, not heat
- Pick your city by weekend

It Is The Drive

This is the part that actually breaks people. Ten miles in Texas is not ten miles anywhere else.

Buyers tour a house at noon on a Sunday and never see the same road at seven on a Tuesday.

The map hides two more things.

Toll Roads Are Daily

Your phone will route you the fast way. In Austin and DFW especially, the fast way is often paid.

It is a small charge twice a day, five days a week, forever.

Something else splits the same street.

School Lines Cut House

District boundaries were drawn decades ago and nobody redraws them to make sense.

Two houses across the road from each other can feed into completely different schools.

Then January brings its own envelope.

No Income Tax, But

The money comes back through property tax, and the rate depends on your county, your city and your school district.

Notices land in spring. The real bill lands at the end of the year.

Year two is where it stings.

Hail, Not Heat

Heat is boring. You run the AC and move on with your life.

It is hail and the winter freeze that hit insurance premiums, and the age of the roof decides how bad.

One choice makes all of this easier.

Choose By Saturday

San Antonio, Austin and DFW are three different lives, not three versions of the same one.

Most people compare listings first and lifestyle second. That is backwards.

Most people pick this the wrong way round.

Comment

PLAN

and I'll DM you
the three city comparison sheet with ta rates, real drive times, and the exact payment breakdown for each

Save this for later.