

The 37 day shift
nobody priced in yet

swipe —

What's inside

- The 37 day math
- Quiet price cuts
- Inventory nobody counts
- Concessions over price
- The 90 day trap

The 37 Day Number

Homes that sold in a weekend two years ago now average about 37 days across most Texas metros.

Nothing broke. The clock just went back to normal.

Normal costs sellers something.

Price Cuts Are Quiet

Roughly a third of active listings have already taken a reduction.

You never see it. It just shows up as a new number one Tuesday morning.

The second cut hurts more.

Inventory Nobody Counts

Finished new construction sitting empty competes directly with your resale listing.

It does not show up in the numbers most people quote you.

It follows you to closing.

Concessions Beat Price

Sellers are covering closing costs and buying rates down instead of slashing the sticker.

Buyers who ask get help. Buyers who assume get nothing.

There is a window for asking.

The 90 Day Trap

Past 90 days on market, buyers stop asking about the house and start asking what is wrong with it.

Pulling it and relisting does not erase the history anymore.

Most of this is fixable in a week.

Comment

LIST

and I'll DM you
the current days on market, price cut percentage, and active inventory count for your exact zip code

Save this for later.