

You paid for 10
option days.
You got 6.

What's inside

- Day one already gone
- Inspector wait list
- Bids take longer
- Ten becomes six
- The 5pm trap

The Clock Starts Quietly

Your option period starts the day after everyone signs.

Nobody calls to tell you it began.

And you are not first in line.

Good Inspectors Are Booked

The ones worth hiring are three days out.

Take whoever is free today and you get what you pay for.

The report is only half the job.

A Report Is Not A Number

Sellers negotiate off real bids, not off scary sentences.

Getting a contractor out to quote it takes another day or two.

Now count what is actually left.

Ten Becomes Six

One day burns on signatures and getting your option fee delivered.

Three more sit waiting on the inspector.

Ten on paper. Six in real life.

Day six has a trap in it.

5PM Is Not A Suggestion

The deadline is a time, not a date.

Notice has to be delivered by then, not decided by then.

You can win those days back.

Comment

TOUR

and I'll DM you
the day by day option period
checklist I run with my buyers

Save this for later.