

One in four Texas listings
did something quiet last month.

What's inside

- The quiet price cut
- Inventory nobody expected
- Sellers priced for 2022
- The three week window
- Concessions are normal again

The Quiet Price Cut

Roughly one in four active Texas listings took a price reduction last month.

That is not a crash. That is sellers meeting the number buyers will actually pay.

The cause is hiding in plain sight.

Buyers Have Options Again

There are more homes sitting on the Texas market than we have seen in over a decade.

A buyer can tour eight houses in a weekend and walk away from all eight.

Choice does something strange to people.

Priced For A Market That Ended

Plenty of sellers are still anchored to what their neighbor got three years ago.

The buyer is not comparing your house to 2022. They are comparing it to the eleven others open right now.

There is a clock on that mistake.

The First Three Weeks

Homes that sell almost always find their buyer early.

Miss that window and showings thin out, and every offer after that comes in lower than the one you turned down.

Price is only half of the problem.

Everything Is Negotiable Now

Buyers are asking for rate buydowns, closing costs, and repairs. Often all three.

A seller paying those is not desperate anymore. That is just what a deal looks like this year.

Your zip code is not the average.

Comment

LIST

and I'll DM you
the current days on market, price cut rate, and active inventory count for your specific area

Save this for later.